Gen. C. G. Dahlgren -7th Mississippi

Posted By: Jamie Roberts <Send E-Mail>

Date: Friday, 7 February 2003, at 9:18 a.m.

I need help clearing up a question I have. In Dunbar Rowland's history of the 7th Mississippi infantry regiment he has the unit as being under the Command of Gen. C. G. Dahlgren. However in his book "Generals in Gray" Ezra J. Warner does not list him as one of the General officers.

Of course Mr. Warner mentions many were never confirmed by the Confederate Congress and gives other reasons why some officers listed as Generals in some reports were excluded from his conclusions. Anybody have an idea on how this came to be? Was it perhaps because Gen. Dahlgren's commission was for State Militia?

Bruce S. Allardice has a book out called "More Generals in Gray" from Louisiana University State Press. I need to buy a copy but in the meanwhile maybe somebody who already has the book can see if he is listed in there?

In Response To: Gen. C. G. Dahlgren -7th Mississippi (Jamie Roberts)

Jamie,

(MY opinion follows)

I believe that when the 7th Miss. was the 7th Miss. Vols. (Before muster in the CSA Oct. 1861) General Dahlgren was commanding the independent companies that had been assembled on the coast by Gov. Pettus for Coast Defense. That may have included companies that became the 3rd Miss. and possibly a company that became part of the 27th. Miss. While these units were on the coast at Shieldsboro, Hansboro, Pass Christian and ocean Springs they were under Dahlgren. Their command structure changed when they were sent to Tennessee in February 1862.

Like you, I have found him listed in the Roster of Confederate Soldiers, 1861-1865 as:

Dahlgren, C.G. GS Gen. & Staff Brig.Gen.

but find no listing of him in Who Was Who in the Civil War by Sifakis, nor did I find any mention in the William C. Davis volumes, The Confederate General.

Charles Dahlgren Of Natchez: The Civil War And Dynastic Decline

Author: Gower, Herschel
Hardback; Book; 20 B&w Photographs
240 pages
Published: June 2002
Chrysalis Books
ISBN: 1574883941

-- Chronicles the life of an ambitious Pennsylvanian who fought for the Confederacy. Biographer Herschel Gower eloquently traces the rise of Charles Dahlgren, brother of the famous Union admiral John A. Dahlgren, to social prominence in the pre-Civil War South. In search of glory, Dahlgren established himself in Natchez, Mississippi; married an heiress; started a family; and prospered. When Mississippi seceded from the Union, he defended his plantations, his ownership of slaves, and his hard-won security. Dahlgren's fortune evaporated with the fall of the Confederacy, and he returned to the North, where he died a Confederate carpetbagger. Readers interested in Southern history and the consequences of allegiance during the Civil War will be enthralled by Dahlgren's provocative story. Chronicles the eventful life of an ambitious Pennsylvanian who fought for the South in the American Civil War. This volume chronicles the eventful life of an ambitious Pennsylvanian who fought for the South in the American Civil War. It illuminates the story of three brothers and their families, whose personal rivalries and sectional loyalties pitted brother against brother.

Charles Dahlgren of Natchez: The Civil War and Dynastic Decline

by Gower, Herschel

Binding: Hardcover

Gower (English and American literature, Vanderbilt University) recounts the story of Charles Dahlgren, his brothers, and their families, as personal rivalries and regional loyalties brought them into conflict during the American Civil War. The book describes Dahlgren's rise to prominence as a banker, planter, and slave owner, and considers it in terms of an attempted dynasty. His economic success led him to a position in the Confederate Army, and he shared but survived that army's defeat, beginning a second career on Wall Street. Annotation c. General Dahlgren is indeed listed in my "More Generals in Gray", and has a bio article there. Herschel Gower has just come out with a book on the Dahlgren family that focuses on General Dahlgren, "General Dahlgren of Natchez", if you are interested in a more in-depth treatment. Dahlgren commanded MS State troops on the Gulf Coast in 1861. Bruce Allardice.

REGIMENTAL HISTORY:

At activation, the 7th Mississippi Infantry Regiment was part of the 3d Brigade, Army of Mississippi. Gen. C.G. Dahlgren was the Brigade Commander with headquarters at Shieldsboro. The Regiment was one of 3 regiments designated for coastal defense, and in December of 1861, it was stationed at Bay St. Louis, Mississippi. On February 26, 1862, the Regiment deployed to Tennessee by rail. It was during this movement that the Regiment was involved in a deadly train accident at Ponchataoula, LA. By March 3, 1862, it was at Jackson, Tennessee. It then moved to Corinth, and was assigned to Gen. J.R. Chalmer's Brigade. Under the command of Lt.Col. Hamilton Mayson, the Regiment fought in the Battle of Shiloh. The 9th and 10th MISS, and the 7th MISS were the first units to charge through the Federal camp on April 6th. These units were heavily engaged for the next two days. It was at Shiloh that Chalmer's Brigade was christened the "High Pressure Brigade."

During the siege of Corinth, the 7th manned an outpost with about 200 men from the Regiment and other units of the Brigade. When joined by an Alabama Brigade, they attacked and drove off a Federal force that had advanced toward their lines.

Under the command of COL. W.H. Bishop, the Regiment took part in the 1862 Kentucky Campaign. On September 14, the Regiment moved to attack the entrenched Federal garrison at Munfordsville. Following an attack made by the 10th MISS, the 7th, 9th, and 29th MISS attacked the works unsuccessfully. On September 16th, the 7th supported a second attack. On October 8, the Brigade was at Danville, Harrodsburg and then at Perryville. It skirmished at Lawrenceburg in the retreat toward through the Cumberland gap (Oct 20) to Knoxville (Oct 31) and then in November, it marched from Chattanooga to Murfreesboro.

During the Battle at Murfreesboro (Stone's River), Chalmer's Brigade was on the right flank of GEN Leonidas Polk's Corps, with the Brigade's right flank on Stone's River. For 48 hours, the Brigade lay in light earth works in cold and rainy weather. The Confederates attacked on December 31 at dawn. Chalmer's Brigade was the pivot for Hardee's Corps and did not attack until around 11 am. The Federals were waiting. In the savage attack and repulse, GEN Chalmer's and many Mississippians went down. Regiments became separated but were reformed under the command of COL White. Here the battle raged in an area known as the Round Forest for some 3 days. 7th MISS casualties totaled 12 killed, 97 wounded and 4 missing. Following the battle at Murfreesboro, the unit fell back to Shelbyville and Tullahoma and held that line until January of 1863 when the 7th crossed the Tennessee River and Lookout Mountain. It camped near Chattanooga. From July 13 to August 23 it was in camp near Bridgeport on the Tennessee River.

When Bragg's Army retreated into Georgia, the Mississippi Brigade was located at Lee and Gordon's Mill and then moved to fight Union forces at Cooper's and Steven's Gaps. The battle of Chickamauga was about to begin. By now the troops were barefooted, hungry, thirsty and worn out but at Lafayette, under the command of GEN Longstreet, they attacked Federal positions near the Glenn House, taking this position. Charging ahead, the Mississippi units overran the Federals who tried to hold at the first elevation of Missionary Ridge. Hindman's Division captured some 17 cannon and 1000 prisoners. After 1 p.m., the Mississippi units again charged enemy positions near the Vidito house, but were repulsed 3 times. The 7th lost 10 killed, 64 wounded, and 1 missing. On November 25, the 7th participated in the battle at Missionary Ridge. Following the Battle of Chickamauga, they joined in the Army's retreat to Dalton, Georgia and made camp for the winter.

In 1864, the Regiment participated in battles at Rocky Face Ridge (May 8) and Resaca (May 14). The Brigade, now under GEN Hood, fought at New Hope Church and Kennesaw Mountain in May and June. Colonel William Bishop now commanded the Regiment during actions in August and on the 30th, they marched into Jonesboro and went into action against Sherman's troops.

In October of 1864, Lee's Corps, of which the 7th was part, occupied Resaca and held Snake Creek Gap while the army moved toward Gadsden, Alabama. On October 30 the Brigade attacked Federal forces along the Harpeth River at Franklin and drove them from the line.

Falling back to Nashville on December 2, the Regiment helped hold Federal forces under General Thomas in Nashville for a time. When the Federals broke out, the Confederate forces retreated toward Franklin. General S.D. Lee took command of the rear guard and slowly fell back into Mississippi until he reached Columbus, where he made his headquarters.

The Brigade was placed on furlough until February 12, 1865. It was then ordered to move to the Carolinas. Some 274 men assembled as the 7th Regiment in Meridian, Mississippi, on February 14th and moved out across Alabama for South Carolina on the 18th. Held up in Montgomery because of the Mobile Campaign, they finally moved toward Augusta on March 4th.

The 7th and 9th MISS Regiments were consolidated on March 31 near Smithfield, NC. Now by April 3, there were only 420 men in the entire Brigade and on April 9, the 7th, 9th, 10th, 41st and 44th MISS Regiments and the 9th MISS Infantry Battalion were consolidated as the 9th Mississippi Regiment with Colonel William C. Richards in command. This unit was part of D.H. Hill's Division in S.D. Lee's Corps. On April 26, the Army was surrendered and then paroled at Greensboro, NC. Elements of the Regiment were with General Taylor when he surrendered on May 4, 1865.

In April 1861, some 911 men of the 7th Mississippi went to war for their state and their homeland.

In April 1865, there were 75 of them left.

VICKSBURG, sometimes noted as CITY OF VICKSBURG, was built in 1857 at New Albany, Ind., and owned and home ported in New Orleans. With the coming of the war she was evidently seized or bought for use on the river. A report of 19 February 1862 tells of her carrying guns up river to the forts above Memphis.

At Natchez, Miss. in May 1862, five Union ships were before the city. They had sent in a flag of truce. At this time, VICKSBURG came down river with troops for the defense of Natchez. Brig. General C. G. Dahlgren, CSA, was on shore at the time and fired a musket to warn her off. She put about and went up river, being chased by two shots from gunboat USS ONEIDA.

VICKSBURG made good her escape. In July 1862 she was spotted on the Black River in company with a Confederate gunboat, probably carrying troops and supplies. Early next year, February 1863, she was "lying at the landing" of the city of Vicksburg. Admiral Porter ordered his ram QUEEN OF THE WEST to run the defenses of Vicksburg, and attack the steamer VICKSBURG in passing down.

Under the daring and gallant Col. Charles R. Ellet, QUEEN OF THE WEST got underway, after delays, and early in the morning of 2 February 1863, came in sight of VICKSBURG.

The Confederates opened a heavy fire on QUEEN OF THE WEST, which was partially turned to make a better angle to deflect projectiles. In so doing, way was lost and the current took charge. But, with guns shotted with incendiary projectiles, Ellet directed a fire on VICKSBURG and rammed her.

"The VICKSBURG," reported Ellet, "was the largest and strongest steamer on this river, and I think they were preparing to use her against our transports, being very fleet." Deserters reported a large hole knocked in the side of VICKSBURG. She was discovered to be on fire, and only held afloat by being buoyed up with coal barges.

Machinery removed, VICKSBURG remained at Vicksburg as a wharf boat. On 29 March 1863, Federal units were sent to quarters, just after midnight. A steamer had been reported coming down river. The weather was squally, and VICKSBURG had gone adrift. She passed by, "a harmless hulk," but was totally burned by three men who were seen chasing after her along the shore.

VICKSBURG didn't die easily. The Federals sent a party to inspect the "totally consumed" hulk and found no machinery aboard. But, in December 1863, a report to Secretary of War E. M. Stanton gave intelligence of a "very formidable vessel" being finished near Mobile. Said the report: "This vessel is said to contain the machinery of the steamer VICKSBURG, which was taken overland from Vicksburg to Mobile. These engines were constructed partially under my superintendence at New Albany, when the steamer VICKSBURG was constructed, and I know the engine to be as powerful as any now on the Mississippi River."
